Vim (/ v i m /; a contraction of Vi IMproved) is a clone, with additions, of Bill Joy's vi text editor program for Unix. Vim's author, Bram Moolenaar, based it upon source code for a port of the Stevie editor to the Amiga and released a version to the public in 1991. Vim is designed for use both from a command-line interface and as a standalone application in a graphical user interface.

The execute command lets you build the mapping string dynamically so your users can change the mapping prefix.. There is a third option for solving this problem: the hasmapto() Vim function. Some plugins will use this to map a command to a key unless the user has already mapped that command to something else. I don't personally like this option because it feels less clear to me, but I know ...

There is a phrase that I want to look for in VIM. When found, I want to delete this phrase. What is the easiest way to cycle to all instances (n), and delete a match one by one (I do not want to delete all of them). NOTE: I know I can delete a certain number of characters or a number of words, but I want to specifically remove the 'match' of my search.

When working inside a terminal the vim-bracketed-paste vim plugin will automatically handle pastes without needing any keystrokes before or after the paste.. It works by detecting bracketed paste mode which is an escape sequence sent by "modern" x-term compatible terminals like iTerm2, gnome-terminal, and other terminals using libvte. As an added bonus it works also for tmux sessions.

I was reading about vim the other day and found out why it used `hjkl` keys as arrow keys. When Bill Joy created the vi text editor he used the ADM-3A terminal, which had the arrows on hjkl keys. Naturally he reused the same keys and the rest is history. Here is how the `hjkl` keys looked. ADM-3A keyboard's hjkl keys...
